A global history of music, from an ethnomusicological perspective, takes into account many and different sources: figurative, literary, dialogic, sound, audiovisual. We ourselves, ethnomusicologists, have become sources for the youngest musicians and singers, who turn to us, to our memory and to our archives, in order to nourish and renew their tradition. The problem of archives, of their nature and quality, of their arrangement and conservation, in this era of hasty technological innovations is crucial also in terms of methodological reflection and new questions on the roles of the observer and of the observed imposed by contemporaneity. Such a theme, fruitful and stimulating in itself, is declined in a specific way starting from the idea of an island, and from the many ways in which it can be articulated: in a geographical sense, first of all, but also in a linguistic, political, and cultural sense overall. There are islands within islands and there are networks of routes that connect complex archipelagos, and the latter often act as bridges to continents: small spaces at the intersection of large ones, not «a drop in the ocean» but «the entire ocean in a drop», as the great Persian Sufi poet Jalāl al-Dīn Muḥammad Rūmī (1207-1273) once said.

The growing mobility of cultures and the development of a new and more acute awareness of “other musics” and “local soundscapes” today opens up new inclusive and multicultural frames. They start from the learning of vocal and instrumental techniques of oral transmission, also through institutional training courses within the Conservatories, to project themselves into various forms of musical, theatrical, and cinematic performances characterized by a stratified hybridization of cognitive, executive, and compositional skills.

The Palermo days of the second symposium of the ICTM Study Group on Global History of Music will take place under the sign of these preliminary reflections, with special reference to the following main themes:

1. Archives in motion: from the preservation of immaterial memories to their uses and functions in the contemporary world.

2. Global paths of making music? Is difference the “third way”?

3. Islands sounds and the echoes of diasporic cultures.
